History of Shinjuku Gyoen

The present site of Shinjuku Gyoen was originally one part of Edo residence of the Lord Naito, the vassal of Ieyasu Tokugawa. In the Meiji era, it became an agricultural experiment station, and then in 1906 it was made into an imperial garden. After the war in 1949, it was opened to the public as a national garden. The garden contains three styles, Landscape Garden, Formal Garden, and Japanese Traditional Garden, and is considered to be one of the most important modern western style gardens in the Meiji era. You can also visit Tamamo Pond, which retains the remnants of the feudal lord's estate from the Edo period, as well as the Mother and Child Woods, where you can enjoy the rich ecosystem of Japan's woodlands near villages.

"Fukuba Strawberry", the first strawberry developed in Japan, was grown here in Shinjuku Gyoen.

For other matters concerning the use of facilities or admission, please visit the Shinjuku Gyoen website, or inquire at one of the information counters inside the garden.
